Jeff Manza is Associate Director of Northwestern University's Institute for Policy Research, and co-chair of IPR's Politics, Institutions, and Policy program. His sociological research intersects the subfields of social stratification and political sociology, with a particular emphasis on how social inequalities come to be manifested in political behavior and public policy in the United States and cross-nationally. Manza's first book, Social Cleavages and Political Change: Voter Alignments and U.S. Party Coalitions (Oxford University Press, 1999), co-authored with Clem Brooks, won the Distinguished Book Prize from the political sociology section of the American Sociological Association. He is also the co-editor (with IPR colleagues Fay Lomax Cook and Benjamin Page) of Navigating Public Opinion: Polls, Policy, and the Future of American Democracy (Oxford University Press, 2002), which was based on a conference held at IPR. His most recent book, co-authored with Christopher Uggen, is Locked Out: Felon Disenfranchisement and American Democracy (Oxford University Press, 2006).

Joseph "Jazz" Hayden is an advocate for prisoners' right to vote. He has a B.A. in Liberal Arts from SUNY New Paltz and a M.A. in Professional Studies from the New York Theological Seminary, and is a graduate of the Harvard School of Divinity's Summer Leadership Institute. Mr. Hayden is the lead plaintiff in a pending class action lawsuit, Hayden v. Pataki, et al, which challenges the constitutionality of New York State's felony disenfranchisement statute. A recent Court of Appeals decision denying plaintiff's claim under the Voting Rights Act was a temporary setback to the case. Previously, Mr. Hayden served as the Director of the New York City Project for the Restoration of the Vote which entailed working with eight major civil rights organizations, including the NAACP, the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, the Mexican American Legal Defense Fund, the ACLU, Sentencing Project, People for the American Way, Demos, and the Brennan Center for Law. His responsibilities included organizing a city-wide coalition of former prisoners, service providers, community-based and faith-based organizations, politicians, and others around the issue of felon disenfranchisement. Mr. Hayden is the founder and Executive Director of Prodigal Sons & Daughters, a social welfare organization whose goal is to build and develop a membership of 100,000 prisoners, parolees, and their families.

Brent Staples joined The New York Times editorial board in 1990. His editorials and essays are included in dozens of college readers throughout the United States and abroad. Before joining the editorial page, he served as an editor of The New York Times Book Review and an assistant editor for metropolitan news. Mr. Staples holds a Ph.D. in psychology from the University of Chicago and is author of Parallel Time, a memoir, which was a finalist for the Los Angeles Times Book Prize and winner of the Anisfield-Wolf Book Award.

Christopher Uggen is Distinguished McKnight Professor of Sociology at the University of Minnesota. He studies crime, law, and deviance, especially how former prisoners manage to put their lives back together. His work appears in journals such as American Sociological Review, American Journal of Sociology, and Criminology and has been featured in media such as the New York Times, The Economist, and NPR. With Jeff Manza, he is the author of Locked Out: Felon Disenfranchisement and American Democracy (Oxford University Press, 2006). His other research, teaching, and advising interests include crime and drug use, discrimination and inequality, and sexual harassment. Uggen currently serves as executive secretary of the American Society of Criminology, associate editor of Law & Society Review, and incoming chair of his department. Since receiving his Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin in 1995, he has received grants from the National Institute of Justice, the National Science Foundation, and the National Institute of Health, awards from the American Society of Criminology, the International Society of Criminology, a Mortar Board Outstanding Faculty Award, election to the Sociological Research Association, a Soros Open Society Institute fellowship, and a McKnight presidential fellowship. Away from work, Uggen is a father, a jogger, and a blogger.
