Life in Books: Study Abroad

The Brooklyn College Abroad Program that Ivan participated can be reached here: http://depthome.brooklyn.cuny.edu/bc-china/. The Brooklyn College Abroad Program that Ivan participated can be reached here: http://www.shfwire.com. The Brooklyn College Abroad Program that Ivan participated can be reached here: http://www.shfwire.com.

Ivan Garcia, an English Major, who has a completely over-the-top answer to the old “what-did-you-do” questions. He has recently finished a three-week study in Nanjing, China, enriched with tours of four other Chinese cities. He told us what his experience was like.

Q: What was the program you went on, and why did you choose this program?

A: I participated in the Brooklyn College Abroad Program to the People’s Republic of China, specifically to Nanjing, and because it was the most affordable. Each program involved three weeks of study in Nanjing enriched with tours of four other Chinese cities: Shanghai, Hangzhou, Wuxi, and Nanjing itself. Each one is unique, with its own goals, design, language, culture, and programs that you choose and then research your way around. It’s an interesting experience, and especially because of how different everything was in the different Chinese cities as compared to New York City. The streets were huge especially in major cities we went to, when compared to New York City. Moreover, the program involved three weeks of study in Nanjing enriched with tours of four other Chinese cities: Shanghai, Hangzhou, Wuxi, and Nanjing itself. Each one is unique, with its own goals, design, language, culture, and programs that you choose and then research your way around. It’s an interesting experience, and especially because of how different everything was in the different Chinese cities as compared to New York City.

Q: Would you recommend this experience to other students? Why?

A: Yes, I would recommend this experience to other students. However, you have to have an open mind, because of all the differences you’ll see. Many things that you take for granted, and many things you won’t notice at first glance, will change your view of the world. I learned a lot about Chinese culture and how it is different from American culture. I also learned a lot about Chinese history and how it has shaped the country today. Additionally, I learned a lot about Chinese language and writing, which is quite different from English. Overall, it was a great experience that I would recommend to anyone interested in studying abroad.

Q: What was the program you went on, and why did you choose this program?

A: I participated in the Brooklyn College Abroad Program to the People’s Republic of China, specifically to Nanjing, and because it was the most affordable. Each program involved three weeks of study in Nanjing enriched with tours of four other Chinese cities: Shanghai, Hangzhou, Wuxi, and Nanjing itself. Each one is unique, with its own goals, design, language, culture, and programs that you choose and then research your way around. It’s an interesting experience, and especially because of how different everything was in the different Chinese cities as compared to New York City.

Q: Would you recommend this experience to other students? Why?

A: Yes, I would recommend this experience to other students. However, you have to have an open mind, because of all the differences you’ll see. Many things that you take for granted, and many things you won’t notice at first glance, will change your view of the world. I learned a lot about Chinese culture and how it is different from American culture. I also learned a lot about Chinese history and how it has shaped the country today. Additionally, I learned a lot about Chinese language and writing, which is quite different from English. Overall, it was a great experience that I would recommend to anyone interested in studying abroad.

Q: What was the program you went on, and why did you choose this program?

A: I participated in the Brooklyn College Abroad Program to the People’s Republic of China, specifically to Nanjing, and because it was the most affordable. Each program involved three weeks of study in Nanjing enriched with tours of four other Chinese cities: Shanghai, Hangzhou, Wuxi, and Nanjing itself. Each one is unique, with its own goals, design, language, culture, and programs that you choose and then research your way around. It’s an interesting experience, and especially because of how different everything was in the different Chinese cities as compared to New York City.

Q: Would you recommend this experience to other students? Why?

A: Yes, I would recommend this experience to other students. However, you have to have an open mind, because of all the differences you’ll see. Many things that you take for granted, and many things you won’t notice at first glance, will change your view of the world. I learned a lot about Chinese culture and how it is different from American culture. I also learned a lot about Chinese history and how it has shaped the country today. Additionally, I learned a lot about Chinese language and writing, which is quite different from English. Overall, it was a great experience that I would recommend to anyone interested in studying abroad.

Q: What was the program you went on, and why did you choose this program?

A: I participated in the Brooklyn College Abroad Program to the People’s Republic of China, specifically to Nanjing, and because it was the most affordable. Each program involved three weeks of study in Nanjing enriched with tours of four other Chinese cities: Shanghai, Hangzhou, Wuxi, and Nanjing itself. Each one is unique, with its own goals, design, language, culture, and programs that you choose and then research your way around. It’s an interesting experience, and especially because of how different everything was in the different Chinese cities as compared to New York City.

Q: Would you recommend this experience to other students? Why?

A: Yes, I would recommend this experience to other students. However, you have to have an open mind, because of all the differences you’ll see. Many things that you take for granted, and many things you won’t notice at first glance, will change your view of the world. I learned a lot about Chinese culture and how it is different from American culture. I also learned a lot about Chinese history and how it has shaped the country today. Additionally, I learned a lot about Chinese language and writing, which is quite different from English. Overall, it was a great experience that I would recommend to anyone interested in studying abroad.

Q: What was the program you went on, and why did you choose this program?

A: I participated in the Brooklyn College Abroad Program to the People’s Republic of China, specifically to Nanjing, and because it was the most affordable. Each program involved three weeks of study in Nanjing enriched with tours of four other Chinese cities: Shanghai, Hangzhou, Wuxi, and Nanjing itself. Each one is unique, with its own goals, design, language, culture, and programs that you choose and then research your way around. It’s an interesting experience, and especially because of how different everything was in the different Chinese cities as compared to New York City.

Q: Would you recommend this experience to other students? Why?

A: Yes, I would recommend this experience to other students. However, you have to have an open mind, because of all the differences you’ll see. Many things that you take for granted, and many things you won’t notice at first glance, will change your view of the world. I learned a lot about Chinese culture and how it is different from American culture. I also learned a lot about Chinese history and how it has shaped the country today. Additionally, I learned a lot about Chinese language and writing, which is quite different from English. Overall, it was a great experience that I would recommend to anyone interested in studying abroad.